

Rediscovering Discipleship
A Picture Is Worth a Thousand Words
Matthew 17:1-8

Books afford us a more in depth look at the emotions and thoughts of its characters than movies. The emotional attachments to both protagonist and antagonist tend to be stronger in books as words take us to depths of emotion that facial expressions do not allow. Is it possible to benefit from the expediency of a picture while still gaining insight into the thought processes of the characters involved?

1. Disciples get to _____ God's glory
 - A. The picture affirmed _____
 - B. The picture affirmed the _____
 - C. The picture affirmed the _____

2. Disciples get to _____ God's glory
 - A. This is My _____ Son
 - B. In whom I am _____
 - C. _____ Him

3. Disciples get to _____ God's glory
 - A. Our _____ is strengthened
 - B. Our _____ is strengthened
 - C. Our _____ is strengthened

Discipleship was something that was culturally embedded into the DNA of the Jewish people. Disciples lived, ate, traveled, listened, and studied under their rabbi. A good disciple, as one rabbi put it, was "covered in the dust of their Rabbi." We are separated from our Master by centuries, but is it still possible to walk with Him in such a way that we become covered in the dust of our Rabbi?